The legislative branch was tied to the citizens of the US; as the general public is represented most through this congressional branch. With the addition of the Constitution to the United States, the legislative branch was established for representing the citizens where they come from. The Senate is made up of 2 congressmen from each state, that aid their constituents in accomplishing what they want and need. The New Jersey Compromise was directed to give the states, ~~and also~~ which include the citizens within it, as much supremacy in the newly forming government. The Great Compromise thus incorporated the New Jersey Compromise theories into effect somewhat, as Senators, and Representatives of the house were established. As discussed earlier, the Senators are elected spots in the senate equally amongst each state. The House however is designated by the population of each state. These peoples greatly aid their districts where they come from, as each district in each state has a member of the House. Both the Senators and members of the house aid their constituents. The constitution has limited majority rule as they have imposed the checks and balances system through the form of establishing 3 branches.

of governments. These three branches limit the power of the other each other, by not allotting one more power over the other. Judicial review is yet another way to prevent mob rule, as they may declare an act, law, or action unconstitutional.
The primary elections have have acted in a way to give more democracy to the people. Now, caucuses are not as great a factor in choosing the electorate choice. Also, citizens may now choose individual persons for places, and can do so without the fear of government. Expansion of suffrage has also given more democracy. The Fourteenth Amendment Article does not allow discrimination among voters or persons in the U.S. This thus led to many more developments, as in the Civil Rights Act that allows blacks and younger people to vote in elections.
